

Case Study – Integrated Management System ISO9001/ISO14001 & OHSAS18001

King Construction provides highways maintenance services to a number of Local Authorities

ISO Team

John Keen - RKMS
Adam Mclean - King Construction

Project Objectives

To assist the company with installing an integrated management system to ISO9001, ISO14001 & BS OHSAS18001:2007.

The company wished to secure a framework agreement with the Local Authority; they had worked with the Local Authority for a number of years and had installed a quality management system but the Local Authority were looking for further commitment in terms of environmental and health and safety performance to ensure the impact of activities on residents was minimised.

Assistance Provided

The project involved identifying all environmental impacts of activities and ensuring adequate controls were established. All risks arising from activities were assessed and again controls established and further strengthened to ensure the safety of employees and the general public.

A management system was developed around current practice and where improvements were identified an action plan was established to ensure improvements were realised.

- Development of risk assessment & method statement documentation
- Identification of applicable legislative and regulatory requirements
- Assessment of environmental impacts of activities and recommendations for improvement
- Site visits and inspections to assess activities and generate recommendations for improvement
- Guidance on Site Waste Management Plans

Outcomes

The company initially gained certification to ISO9001 followed by ISO14001 & OHSAS18001 at the first assessment.

The client has retained the services of Rosewood Keen Management Services to maintain their system.

Having achieved the three standards the company have seen their tender success rate increase significantly as they are able to demonstrate their credentials by external third party assessment.
